

George J. Chanos – Republican (Appointed)
31st Nevada Attorney General
Term: October 26, 2005-January 1, 2007

Biography

George James Chanos, born in Wauwatosa, Wisconsin, on August 3, 1958, spent his childhood between Wisconsin and Las Vegas. Chanos, a member of the high school debate team, graduated from Valley High School in Las Vegas.

In 1980, he served as President of the Consolidated Students of the University of Nevada, Las Vegas, and in 1981, he graduated with a bachelor's degree in psychology. After completing his undergraduate degree, he served as an intern in then-United States Senator Paul Laxalt's office for six months.

The path that led Chanos to one of Nevada's highest governmental posts began in his early childhood.

When Chanos was five or six years old, [President] John Kennedy was assassinated, "and I was in the car with my mother", Chanos said. "I will never forget that moment when it came over the radio. My mother pulled the car to the side of the road and started to cry. And it had an impact on me. So I watched the television coverage that occurred afterward about the assassination and I learned about politics . . . for the first time. It just intrigued me as something that was important and that this man was important and that people loved this man, and so I wanted to be like this man when I was very young."¹

In 1985, Chanos graduated from the University of San Diego School of Law with a Juris Doctorate degree. He worked as a business litigator in the San Diego office of a 700+ attorney firm, and developed his skills as a young lawyer by practicing against lawyers from some of the nation's top law firms.

In the early 1990s, inspired by the success of the game Trivial Pursuits, Chanos took a break from practicing law in order to produce and market a moderately successful trivia board game, Notable Quotables, which is based on identifying quotations by famous people. With an infusion of cash from billionaire investor Alex Spanos, owner of the San Diego Chargers football team, Chanos produced 50,000 copies of the game.

'I had collected quotes as a hobby, and I decided that if there was a national fad that could be created out of trivia that there was probably a fairly strong pre-existing market for quotations,' Chanos said, 'but I knew it couldn't be your run-of-the-mill quotations. The quotations would have to be witty, profound, outrageous, something very compelling about the quotations to make a board game.²

In 1995, Chanos and his wife, Adriana Escobar Chanos, whom he first met in kindergarten and started dating in college, moved back to Las Vegas where they opened a joint law practice. While building their own firm, Chanos ultimately developed a business litigation and transactional practice and became a recognized authority in negotiation and dispute resolution, participating in the Harvard Negotiation Project and lecturing to other lawyers.

In 1998, their daughter Alexandra was born. Adriana, a former deputy city attorney in San Diego, also served as a member of the Nevada Taxicab Authority Board and the Nevada Public Utilities Commission. Later, she was named Nevada's consumer advocate but resigned when her husband became Attorney General.

In the early 2000's, Governor Kenny Guinn appointed Chanos to fill the final two years of Brian Sandoval's term as attorney general.³ Four months after his appointment as the state's top lawyer, Chanos said, "[I] just wasn't cut out for politics."⁴ About 13 months later, despite a five to one fundraising advantage over his opponent, he announced he would finish his term but wouldn't run for the office because he "wanted to spend more time with his family".⁵ In commenting for this biography, Chanos stated, "the truth is that I loved the work but I hated the politics. Politics has become an exceedingly toxic, polarized, and dysfunctional environment. It's not for me. I will continue to serve, but not as an elected official."

As Attorney General, Chanos involved himself in the defense of state's rights. In December 2005, Chanos declared invalid a new state law aimed at giving Nevadans the opportunity to buy lower-cost drugs from Canada. Although he personally supported the need for low cost prescription drugs, he determined that the law passed by the Nevada legislature, on that subject, was fundamentally flawed because it required imported drugs to be approved by the FDA, when the FDA had specifically indicated that Canadian drugs were "not FDA approved". Canadian drugs are actually approved only by the Canadian government. He wrote an opinion which asserted that state law, which permitted residents to purchase lower-cost prescription drugs from Canada, "[presented] insurmountable legal obstacles to the importation of virtually any drugs from Canada."⁶

In March 2006, Chanos opposed efforts by the federal government to ship high-level nuclear waste to Yucca Mountain. In August 2006, the U.S. District Court in Reno rejected the appeal.

Chanos also supported voter-approved marijuana for medicinal purposes over the objections of the federal government. He also supported a proposal to split up the Ninth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to separate Nevada from the same appellate court that has jurisdiction over California.

On November 1, 2006, Chanos successfully argued the case of Whorton v. Bockting, 549 U.S. 406 (2007), before the U.S. Supreme Court. Justice Alito delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court.

After finishing his two-year appointment as Attorney General, Chanos realized that he no longer wanted a life in politics and turned to other interests. Shortly thereafter, his marriage with Adriana ended in divorce. They remain close friends. Adriana now is a District Court judge.

In 2008, Chanos joined Capriottis Sandwich Shop, Inc. as a major stockholder and Chairman of the Board of Directors. From 2008 to 2018, Chanos helped the company grow from 40 stores to over 100 stores, now operating in 19 states.

In November 2012, Chanos suffered a major heart attack-a life-altering incident that inspired him to write a motivational book for Millennials, Seize Your Destiny: A Roadmap to Success. Choices That Lead to a Happy, Successful and Meaningful Life. The book, which began as a letter to his daughter, explains what is happening in the world and prepares readers for what is ahead. He currently is working on a second, motivational book for Millennials, Millennial Samurai that will be published in 2018. His current focus is on writing and speaking.

On July 18, 2015, Chanos married Donna Uy. They currently live in Las Vegas.
