PREFACE

IN introducing my second volume I have to thank the Egyptian Exploration Society for their kind permission to include the fragment of the Sayings of Simonides from the Hibeh Papyrus and the new fragment of Ibycus from the XVth Ολγυήnychus volume.

While I was making the Index I found that I had omitted the second reference to Simonides in the Panion Chronicle, that recording his death at the age of ninety in the year 468 B C, and the following characteristic anecdote of Timocreon in the Περὶ Ῥακιδῶν of Philodemus, first rightly emended by Wilamowitz in his Sappho und Simonides: ‘When that conceited fellow Timocreon of Rhodes was asked, as he came before the judge of the competition, where he hailed from, he replied “You shall hear presently from the herald”—a remark which was passed on. However, his Castor-song proved so little to the liking of his audience that the judge stretched out his wand and nearly stopped him before he had finished. This meant defeat, and when, as he withdrew, his questioner repeated “Where do you hail from?” he replied “From Seriphus.”’

Readers of Volume I should make the following corrections—none of which, by the way, is necessitated by any lapse of Mr Heinemann’s admirable staff at p 16 near the bottom read ἀριθμηθείσαν, p 45 l 5 632-629 B C, Alcman l 14 γεραιάτος 35 μῆσαμένοι, 44 μωμέσθαι, 45 εἶμεν, Alcaeus l. 1

In the Proceedings of the Cambridge Philological Society for 1922, p. 14, I have proposed the following reading of the passage beginning at l. 46 of Alcman's Partheneion ἐκπρέπης τῶς ὤπερ αἴ τις | ἐν δρόσοις στάσειεν ἵππον | παγὸν ἀφελθοφόρον καναχάποδα | ταῖς ἐπιπετριδίῳν ὀνάγρων, comparing Aeschylus' ἐπιτυμβίδιος, Strabo 568 τὰ τῶν Λυκαόνων ὀροπέδια ψυχρὰ καὶ ψιλὰ καὶ ὀναγρόβωτα, and Aeschylus Agamemnon 141 with Callimachus Hecale col 2 l 4, and supposing the corruption of ὀνάγρων to have proceeded thus ὀνάγρων—ὀναίρων—ὀνείρων, with which we may compare ὄναρ and Hesychius ἀναῖρον ὄνειρον Κρήτες.

The newly discovered fragments of Lesbian poetry are reserved for the appendix to Volume III. I may be allowed to add that the one wholly unfavourable criticism published of my first volume will be found to be fully answered partly in the Classical Review for November 1922 and partly in the above volume of the Cambridge Philological Society's Proceedings.

INSCRIPTION

Pausanias Description of Greece [on the Pythian Games] In the 3rd year of the 48th Olympiad (B C 586¹) at which the victor was Glaucias of Crotona, the Amphictyons established competitions for flute-song and flute-playing in addition to the contest for singers to the lyre which had been held from the beginning. The winners proclaimed on the occasion were a Cephallenian named Melampus in lyre-song, Echembrotus the Arcadian in flute-song, and Sacadas of Argos in flute-playing. At the 2nd Pythiad they abandoned the flute-song, having decided that it was not an auspicious form of music. For the flute-song consisted of very doleful flute-music and elegies sung to its accompaniment. My witness here is the offering set up by Echembrotus, which consists of a bronze tripod dedicated to the Theban Heracles, bearing the following inscription.

To the Theban Heracles Echembrotus of Arcadia dedicated this offering in return for his victory at the Games of the Amphictyons, where he sang to the Greeks melodies and elegiac lines to the music of the flute.

¹ the date of the 1st Pythiad is given by some authorities as 582

Pausanias Description of Greece [on Mount Helicon] The poets or persons otherwise eminent in music who have been accorded statues are these. Thamyris is represented as he was when he had gone blind, holding a broken lyre, Anon of Methymna is seated on a dolphin, Sacadas of Argos is portrayed, by a sculptor who did not understand Pindar's Prelude in his honour, as a flute-player no bigger than his flutes, Hesiod sits with his lyre upon his lap, etc.

Plutarch Music [on flute-sung Nomes]. There is another ancient Nome called Cradiaz, which Hipponax declares to have been played by Mimnemos. For in the earliest times the singers to the flute sang elegiac verse set to music. This is made clear by the Panathenaic register of the winners of the musical contest. Sacadas of Argos also, who is mentioned by Pindar, was a composer of tunes and elegiac poems set to tunes, and at the same time was a great flute-player with three Pythian victories to his name. It seems that of the three 'modes' employed by Polymnastus and Sacadas, the Dorian, the Phrygian, and the Lydian, Sacadas taught his choirus to sing successive strophès composed by him in each, and in that order, the Nome in question being called the Three-Part owing to these changes of 'mode'. However, according to the register of poets at Sicyon, the inventor of this Nome was Clonas. The first establishment of music at Sparta was due to Terpander. The second is best ascribed to Thaletas, Xenodamus, Xenocritus, Polymnastus, and Sacadas of Argos. These were the men who introduced the Dances of Naked Youths at Sparta, the Provings in Arcadia, and the Garment-Songs as they are called at Argos. Thaletas, Xenodamus, and Xenocritus were composers of Paeans, Polymnastus of the Orthian or High-pitched Songs, and Sacadas of Elegiac.

Pausanias Description of Greece [on the Pythian Games]. In the 3rd year of the 48th Olympiad¹ the victors proclaimed were a Cephallenian named Melampus for lyre-song, Echembrus the Arcadian for flute-song, and Sacadas of Argos for flute-playing. The same Sacadas was also victor in the two succeeding Pythiads.

Plutarch Music 12. There is something to be said too in the matter of rhythms Polymnastus, who followed Terpander, employed new rhythms as well as his, but preserved throughout the same beautiful style, and the like is true of Thaletas and Sacadas, who showed powers of invention in the rhythmic art without exceeding the limits of the beautiful style they inherited

Pollux Vocabulary The Nomes of Olympus and Maisyas are the Phygian and the Lydian, that of Sacadas the Pythian, those of Eunus the Cyclic, and those of Olympus (the younger?) Eptymbidian or Over-the Grave

The Same The Pythian Flute-Nome has five parts, the Trial, the Challenge, the Iambics, the Spondaics, and the Dance of Triumph It is a representation (in music) of the fight between Apollo and the Serpent In the Trial Apollo looks about him to see if the place is suitable for the struggle, in the Challenge he calls the Serpent to come on, in the Iambics he fights him The Iambics include passages for the trumpet and one to be played through the teeth, this representing the gnashing of the Serpent when he is pierced with the arrows The Spondaics depict the victory of the God, and in the last of the five parts he dances triumphant¹

LIFE OF SACADAS

Pausanias Description of Greece [on Aigos] A little aside from the road to the Gymnasium called Cylaiabis and the gate there, stands the tomb of Sacadas, who was the first to perform the Pythian tune at Delphi, and appears to have put an end to the old feud between Apollo and the flute-players which had persisted ever since the day of his contest with the Silenus Maïsyas ¹

The Same [on the founding of Messenè by Epameinondas] That day was devoted to sacrifices and prayers. On the following days they began to build the wall round the city, and houses and temples within it. The work was done to the accompaniment of no music but that of Boeotian and Aigive flutes, and there was keen competition between the melodies of Sacadas and those of Pionomus ²

Hesychius Glossary Sacadeion — a kind of musical instrument

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner If you are asked the names of the warriors who were shut up in the Wooden Horse you will perhaps be able to give one or two, and even these you will hardly get from Stesichorus' account, but rather from the Taking of Troy of Sacadas the Aigive, who gives a very long list

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on Heracles]. The more modern poets, according to Megacleides, represent him as going about merely in the guise of a robber, with cudgel, lion-skin, and bow. This fashion was set by Stesichorus of Himera. The lyric poet Xanthus, who comes before Stesichorus, as is testified by Stesichorus himself, does not represent him thus, if we may believe Megacleides, but as he appears in Homer.

2-3 ORESTEIA

The Same Stesichorus has drawn a great deal upon Xanthus, for instance upon his Oresteia as it is called.

Aelian Historical Miscellany. The lyric poet Xanthus, who comes before Stesichorus of Himera, says that Electra daughter of Agamemnon was originally called Laodice. After the murder of her father, when Aegisthus had married Clytemnestra and become king, and Laodice was likely to die an old maid, the Argives gave her the name of Electra because she remained a virgin.¹

LIFE

Simonides Fragment 61

For thus have Homer and Stesichorus sung to the peoples.

Plutarch Music [on Linus, Thamyris, Demodocus, etc] The manner of the poems of the aforesaid poets was not free and without metre, but like those of Stesichorus and the older lyric poets who made epic verse and put it to music.

The Same. We learn that the Hæmatian Nome was the work of Olympus from the treatise of Glaucus on The Ancient Poets, where we are also informed that the poet imitated by Stesichorus of Himeia was neither Orpheus nor Terpander nor Archilochus nor Thaletas, but Olympus, and that Stesichorus made use of the Hæmatian Nome and the dactylic form, which according to some authorities comes from the Orthian or High-pitched Nome

The Same Innovations in rhythm are ascribed to Aleman, and also to Stesichorus, in both cases without departing from the beautiful manner

Suidas Lexicon Simonides — In point of time he comes next to Stesichorus. He flourished¹ in the 56th Olympiad (556-553), though some authorities have assigned him to the 62nd (532-529)

Cicero Republic. Stesichorus cannot have been Hesiod's grandson through his daughter as some authorities declare. For the year of his death was that of the birth of Simonides, in the 56th Olympiad (556-553)²

Tzetzes Life of Hesiod. Aristotle the philosopher in the Constitution of Orchomenus declares that Stesichorus the lyric poet was the son of Hesiod by Ctimenè sister of Amphiphanes and Ganyctor and daughter of Phegeus. But this Stesichorus was a contemporary of Pythagoras the philosopher and Phalaüs of Agrigentum³

Aristotle Rhetoric [on examples]. And secondly there is the fable, such as that of Stesichorus about Phalaüs. For Stesichorus, when the Himeræans elected Phalaüs general with unlimited powers and proposed to give him a bodyguard, made a speech to them at the end of which he told them the following fable. A horse who had a meadow all to himself, found his title disputed by a stag who came and destroyed the pasturage. Desiring to avenge himself, he begged the man's help to punish the stag, which the man promised him if he would take bit and bridle of him and let him mount him javelins in hand. The bargain struck, the man got on his back; but the horse immediately found that he had received not vengeance on the stag but servitude to the man. 'Even so you,' said Stesichorus, 'should

Quintilian Elements of Oratory Among the nine lyric poets Pindar stands easily first. . . The strength of Stesichorus' genius is shown among other things by his subject-matter. He sings of great wars and famous chieftains, sustaining all the weight of epic poetry with a lyre. Indeed he gives his characters the dignity that belongs to them both in speech and action, and if he had only kept within proper bounds might well have been counted a good

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner ¹ Cakes, according to Seleucus, are first mentioned by Panyassis in his Account of the Human Sacrifices in Egypt, in which he says that they offered many a cake and many a capon, although Stesichorus or Ibycus had written before him in the work called Funeral Games

Bring you maid-gifts, sesame-cakes, goats, sweet-oil cakes, cakes of all sorts, and with them yellow honey.²

Note here that there is excellent authority for ascribing that poem to Stesichorus rather than Ibycus, namely the poet Simonides where he says in a passage about Meleager [and the spear-throwing] 'So Homer and Stesichorus sang to the peoples' For in the poem in question Stesichorus says

In the leap the victor was Ampharaus, and in the javelin Meleager

11 DAPHNIS

Aelian Historical Miscellanies Daphnis the Neatheid according to some authorities was the beloved, and according to others the son, of Hermes, and is said to have received this name from the circumstance that his mother, who was a Nymph, exposed him under a daphnè or bay-tree. The cows which he tended were sisters of the cattle of the Sun, of which Homer tells in the Odyssey. And while he watched them in Sicily, one of the Nymphs fell in love with him and had him for her mate, as well she might, seeing that he was both a handsome lad and then 'making the first hair to his lip,' which, as Homer says, 'is the fairest season of youth' in a person with good looks. And more, she made a covenant with him that he would have to do with no other woman, threatening him with the certain loss of his sight if he should break his word. So it was agreed, but some time after, a king's daughter falling in love with him, he broke the covenant when he was overcome with wine, and lay with her. From this story arose the Bucolic songs or lays of herdsmen, having for their theme the blinding of Daphnis. The first composer of such songs was Stesichorus of Himera.

Diodorus of Sicily Historical Library We will now try to narrate the myth of Daphnis. It seems there are certain highlands in Sicily called the Heraean Hills, which for their beauty, character, and physical peculiarities are said to be excellently suited for a summer holiday. The district possesses an abundance of springs remarkable for the sweetness of their water, and is full of trees of every sort, among them a multitude of great oaks¹ which bear fruit of unusual size, indeed twice as large as is found in other parts. Here too some of the fruits of cultivation grow of themselves, vines in profusion and apples in an incredible plenty. Indeed a Carthaginian army once lived on this country when they had otherwise starved to death, these highlands coming to their aid with a limitless and inexhaustible supply of food. In this country, at a spot divinely fair where two tree-clad valleys meet in a grove sacred to the Nymphs, the story goes that the child afterwards called Daphnis was born the son of Hermes and a Nymph, and received his name from the abundance and density of the bay-trees that grew there. Brought up by the Nymphs, this Daphnis came to be master of immense herds of cattle, which were his incessant care, whence his name of Neatheid. And being endowed with a great gift for melody, he invented the Bucolic or Pastoral poetry and music which remain in favour in Sicily to this day. It is further said that Daphnis attended Artemis on her hunting with much pleasure to the Goddess, delighting her with his pipe and his pastoral melodies. And we are told that one of the Nymphs, who fell in love with him, warned him that if he had to do with any other woman he would lose his sight, and that being made drunk and led astray by some princess, he lost it as the Nymph had foretold.¹

Isocrates Helen. Moreover Helen displayed her power to the poet Stesichorus. Having found some fault with her at the beginning of his poem the Helen, he went away [from the performance] blind, and then when, realising the cause of his misfortune, he composed what is called the Palmode or Recantation, she restored him his sight.

Scholias on Euripides Orestes ['Conspicuous for blame were all the daughters begotten of Tyndareus, and of ill-repute throughout all Greece']. According to Stesichorus, when Tyndareus was sacrificing to the Gods he forgot Aphrodite, and for this the Goddess made his daughters twice-wed, thrice-wed, and husband-forsakers. The passage runs thus:

How Tyndareus one day in making sacrifice to all the Gods forgot the joy-giving Cypris, and in anger she caused the maidens of Tyndareus to be twice-wed and thrice, and forsakers of husbands

Pausanias Description of Greece [on Argos] Near the temple of the Twin Brethren is one dedicated to Ilithyia by Helen when, upon Theseus' departure into Thesprotis with Peirithous, Aphidna was taken by the Dioscuri and Helen carried off to Sparta. It is said that she was then with child, and being brought to bed at Argos and dedicating the temple to Ilithyia she gave the daughter she bore into the care of Clytemnestra, already the queen of Agamemnon, and some time afterwards was married to Menelaus. And on this account Euphorion of Chalcis and Alexander of Pleuron in their epic poetry, and Stesichorus of Himera before them, all declare that the Argives hold Iphigeneia to have been the daughter of Theseus.

Scholiast on the Iliad ['what will become of our covenants and oaths?'] According to some authorities, when the best men in Greece came to win Helen because of her birth and beauty, her father Tyndareus for fear that his preference for one should make the rest his enemies, made them all take an oath that if the successful suitor suffered wrong in respect of his daughter, they would all come with a will to his aid, and so gave her to Menelaus. And when soon afterwards she was carried off by Paris, they joined the expedition because of their oaths. The story is told by Stesichorus.

Tzetzes on Lycophion The poets Stesichorus, Euphorion, and Alexander of Aetolia make Hector the son of Apollo.

Scholias on Euripides Andromache ['Astyanax hurled from the dizzy walls']. Stesichorus, however, relates that he was killed,² and the poet who composed the Sack that he was also thrown from the wall

33 CYCNUS

Scholias on Pindar Olympians ['the fight with Cycnus turned even the conquering Heracles about']: The great Heracles was turned about or gave ground in his fight with Cycnus because Cycnus was set on by Ares. The cause of Heracles fighting him was his inhospitality, for he lived in the Pass of Thessaly and beheaded travellers in order to build a temple to Apollo with their heads, and when Heracles came that way was for serving him the same. Upon their joining battle Heracles took to flight because Ares aided the youthful Cycnus. But afterwards Heracles killed him like the rest of his enemies. The story is told by Stesichorus in the work called Cycnus.

37, 38

Scholias on the same (later) [‘Such roundelays of the fair-tressed Graces must the clever poet sing when the glad voice of the swallow babbles of the Springtide’] This comes from the passage of Stesichorus in the Tale of Orestes: ‘Such’ etc —(again) This too is an ‘intermixture’ of Stesichorus who says ‘When’ etc

46¹ CALYCE

The Same: To quote the 4th Book of Aristoxenus On Music, 'In former times the women had a song called Calyce' It was a poem of Stesichorus in which a maiden called Calycè prayed to Aphrodite that she might be wedded to a youth called Euathlus, and when he flouted her threw herself over a cliff. The scene was laid near Leucas. The poet gave the maiden a very virtuous character, for she had no wish that she and the youth should come together at all hazards, but prayed that she might if possible be his wedded wife, or failing that might die.²

47-48 RHADINÈ

Strabo Geography [on Triphylia in Elis] Moreover there is a plain there called Samian, from which it may further be inferred that there was once a city of Samos at the spot. Again the Rhadinè ascribed to Stesichorus³ which begins

Come Muse sweet and clear, begin thou the lovely-named lay of the Samian children, crying aloud on thy lovely lyre, describes the children as of this Samos. For the poet tells how Rhadinè when wedded to a despot at Corinth sailed from Samos thither with a south-west wind—certainly not the Ionian Samos, and with the same wind her brother arrived at the head of a sacred mission at Delphi, moreover her cousin-lover goes off after her to Corinth in a chariot, and the despot kills them both and sends the bodies back in a chariot, though indeed he repents and recalls it, and buries them.

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner According to Megacleides the more modern poets represent Heracles as going about only in the guise of a robber, with club, lion-skin, and bow, the fashion being set by Stesichorus of Himera. And indeed the lyric poet Xanthus, who comes earlier than Stesichorus, as the latter testifies,² does not, if we may believe Megacleides, dress him in this part but in that given him by Homer, though Stesichorus in many respects imitates Xanthus, for instance in the poem called the Tale of Orestes.

60

Pausanias Description of Greece The Thebans show the tomb of the children born by Megara to Heracles, giving a similar account of their death to that we read in Stesichorus of Himera and in the epic poems of Panyassis.

61

Plutarch The Malignity of Herodotus And yet among the ancient men of letters neither Homer, nor Hesiod, nor Archilochus, nor Pindar, nor Stesichorus, nor Alcman, nor Pindar, knew anything of an Egyptian or Phoenician Heracles, but all know this one Heracles who was both of Boeotia and of Argos.

62

Etymologicum Magnum Typhoeus —Hesiod makes him a son of Earth, but Stesichorus says that Hera bore him as a virgin-birth out of spite to Zeus.³

67

Himerius Orations Anacreon adorns with his songs the city of Teos, and derives from it his loves, Alcaeus adorns Lesbos and fills his poems with Mytilenè, Simonides and Bacchylides have set their hearts upon Iulis, and Sicilian Himera is not only freed from despots but adorned with words by Stesichorus

68

Aelian Natural History: Some reapers one day, being very thirsty because of the burning heat, sent one of their number—it was sixteen¹—to fetch water from a neighbouring spring This man, who went sickle in hand with the picher on his shoulder, found when he reached the place an eagle held so irresistibly in the coils of a snake that he must very soon be crushed to death It seems the eagle had pounced on the snake, but failing to make good his design, instead of carrying off, as Homer says, supper to his children, became encircled in those coils and was like rather to be slain than to slay Having heard that the eagle is the messenger and minister of Zeus, and well knowing that the snake is an evil beast, the fellow severs the creature with the aforesaid sickle and thereby frees the eagle from his hopeless bondage. His unlooked for task accomplished, the countryman filled his pitcher, and going back, mixed the wine and handed it round to the company, who all drained both their first cups before the meal and many more along with it, he bidding his turn, being for that time as it happened servingman and not guest. But no sooner had he raised cup to lip, than the eagle he had saved, being as luck would have it still near by and willing to make him good return for his service, swoops on the cup, knocks it over, and wastes the drink. The poor fellow, who had been very thirsty, cried out in anger, 'You are the bird I saved'—for he recognised him—'and is this your gratitude? Here's a foul end to a fair deed! How shall any man now trouble himself for another out of fear of the God of thanks?' As he spoke he grew still thirstier, when turning about he sees his comrades that had drunk gasping in the article of death. It seems that the snake had voided his vomit in the spring and fouled it with his venom, and the eagle had returned like with like and saved his saviour.

Criates of Pergamum declares that this tale is told in a little-known poem of Stesichorus, which in my opinion is high and ancient authority.

Introduction to Hesiod Shield of Heracles. Stesichorus too ascribes the poem to Hesiod.

70

Pausanias Description of Greece [on the Rock of Actaeon]. According to Stesichorus of Himera the Goddess wrapped Actaeon in a doeskin, thus making ready for his slaying by the hounds, to prevent his taking Semele to wife.

71¹

Plutarch On the Sagacity of Animals: Stesichorus too tells that Odysseus' shield was blazoned with a dolphin.

72

Philodemus Music. True to his name Teipander, Gladdener of Men, pleased the judges of the contests, the Spartans quelled the disorders by choosing not to disobey the oracle, and possibly also because they were prevailed on by words of persuasion. Nevertheless, the story of Stesichorus is incorrect, and with regard to Pindar we do not know if what he did was successful in putting a stop to the party strife. But if either was the fact, it was done rather by words poetically arranged than by poetry, and they would have met with even greater success if they had employed prose.

73

Scholast on the Iliad ['Even so may your bones lie with mine in the same urn, to wit the gold one of two handles which thy lady mother gave thee']: Dionysus, having entertained Hephaestus at Naxos, received from him a golden urn, and afterwards, when he took refuge from the pursuit of Lycurgus in the sea and was kindly received by Thetis, gave the fire-God fashioned urn to her, and she made a gift of it to her son Achilles, to be the urn of his burial. The story is told by Stesichorus.

74¹

Plutarch The Face in the Moon. If not, Theon here will call in his support Mimneimus, Cydias, and Archilochus, and with them Stesichorus and Pindar, who bewail in eclipses that 'the most manifest of stars is stolen away' and 'noonday made night,' and declare that 'the beam of the sun is the path of darkness.'

Suidas Lexicon. Ibycus. — Son of Phytius, or, according to another account, of Polyzelus of Messenè the historian, or as some writers say, of Ceidas, by birth of Rhegium. Thence he went to Samos when it was ruled by Polycrates father of the despot of that name,³ whose date falls in the reign of Croesus, the 54th Olympiad (B C 564-561). He was of an extremely amorous disposition, and was the inventor of the instrument called sambuca, which is a kind of three-cornered lyre. His works are in seven Books written in the Doric dialect. For the spectators near by heard what they said, and though Ibycus had long disappeared and been mourned for dead, took up the matter of this speech and reported it to the ruling authority. Whereupon they were convicted and forthwith executed, not indeed that they were punished by the cranes, but rather compelled by their own garrulity as by some Fury or Doom-Goddess to confess to the murder they had committed.¹

Robbers slew thee, Ibycus, the day thou camest to land on a desert shore untrod, but not till thou hadst called to aid thee a cloud of cranes who had come witnesses to thy woeful death. Nor was thy call in vain, for by reason of their clang an avenging Fury requited thy murder in the land of

I sing of the end of shoaly Italia, of Rhegium which tasteth ever of the water of Sicily, because Ibycus that lover of the lyre, that lover of lads, was buried by her, his many pleasures over, beneath a leafy elm-tree, where much ivy and a bed of white reed make a covering for his grave⁶

Cicero Tusculan Disputations. What extravagant things Alcaeus writes on the love of youths¹ and as for Anacreon, his poetry is erotic from beginning to end. Yet to judge from his works they all were surpassed in this matter by Ibycus of Rhegium. And the love of all these poets was the sensual love.

Plutarch On High-Birth. How often in Simonides, in Pindar, in Alcaeus, in Ibycus, in Stesichorus, is high-birth a matter of praise and honour?

'Tis but in Spring the quince-trees of the Maids' holy garden grow green with the watering rills from the river, and the vine-blossoms wax 'neath the mantling sprays of the vines, but for me Love's awake the year round, and like the Northwind from Thiaee aflame with the lightning, comes with a rush from the Cyprian, with shivering fancies baleful and bold, and with masterful power shakes me to the bottom of my heart.

Old Etymologicum Magnum 197 Cyaras —Ibycus·
nor Cyaras the general of the Medians

Some authorities derive this from Cyarias by shortening, others from Cyra ('), if it comes from the compound Cyranus the a is not pleonastic, but if it comes from Cyra with pleonasm of a

21

Herodian Words without Parallel τάφος: but when it is used for 'amazement' it is neuter, compare [Homer] 'She sat for a long while silent, for amazement had come to her heart' But perhaps this instance fails to convince Ibycus, at any rate, has distinguished the gender in his first Book, where he follows Homer very closely

sat for a long time beside him fixed in amazement

Scholast on Pindar ['Ortygia, scion of famous Syracuse'] Ortygia, once an island, later became joined to the mainland, compare Ibycus

Aelian Natural History [on the snake called dipsas] I must fain charm this beast with a tale, and therefore I will not withhold one I have heard, lest I be thought to be ignorant of it. Report hath it that Prometheus stole the fire, and this tale says that Zeus flew into a rage and gave those who told him of the theft a charm to avert old age. I understand that the recipients of this charm put it upon an ass, and the ass went on before with his pack, and growing thirsty—for it was summertime—betook himself to a spring to get him drink. But the snake that guarded that spring checked his advance, and would have driven him off had he not twisted his head about and bought his friendship with the only gift he had to hand, the charm he carried on his back. The bargain is struck. The ass drinks, the snake sloughs his old age, receiving, they say, the ass's thirst to boot. Well now, is this tale of my own making? No, I cannot claim that for mine which was told before me by Sophocles the tragedy-writer, Deinolochus the rival of Epicharmus, Ibycus of Rhegium, and Aristaeas and Apollophanes the writers of comedy.

ANACREON

LIFE

Strabo Geography Teos is built on a peninsula and has a harbour. It is the birthplace of the lyric poet Anacreon, in whose time the inhabitants left their city and founded Abdera in Thrace because they would not endure the Persian yoke—whence the saying ‘Abdera, fair new home of them of Teos,’—though indeed some of the Teians returned in later days.

Aristoxenus Histories. Approximately 514 years are represented as having elapsed between the Trojan War and the times of the physical philosopher Xenophanes, of Anacreon and Polycrates, and of the blockade of Ionia by Harpagus the Persian and the migration of the Phocaeans to Marseilles to escape it.

Eusebius Chronicle. Second year of the 62nd Olympiad (B.C. 532–529). flourished the lyric poet Anacreon.

Suidas Lexicon. Anacreon: Of Teos, a lyric poet, son of Scythinus or, according to other varying authorities, of Eumelus, Parthenius, or Aristocritus. He wrote elegiac and iambic poems, all in the Ionic dialect. He was contemporary with Polycrates tyrant of Samos, that is, of the 62nd Olympiad, though some authorities put him in the time of Cyrus and Cambyses, that is, in the 65th (B.C. 520–517). Driven from Teos through the revolt of Strabo Geography [on Samos] These despotisms culminated in Polycrates and his brother Syloson The former by fortune and power became so great as to rule the seas Under his roof lived the lyric Anacreon, whose poetry abounds with references to him.

Anacreon, and gave him to his son to teach him his heart's desire; and under him the lad, labouring with the lyre at royal virtue, seemed likely to fulfil the prayer of which Homer speaks, by surpassing his father Polycrates in all accomplishments¹

The Same · Anacreon rejoiced, when summoned to the court of Polycrates, to address the flaxen-haired Megistes, sweet it was to Pindar to salute Hiero before Zeus . . .

The Same Anacreon sang the praise of the fortunes of Polycrates when the Samians gave offerings to the Goddess

Maximus of Tyre Dissertations Anacreon, the poet of Teos, is said to have been punished by Love in the following way One day at the Pan-Ionian Festival a nurse was carrying a baby in the Ionian Meeting-Place,² when Anacreon came along tipsy and shouting with a wreath on his head, and stumbling against the woman and her charge let fall some words of abuse The indignant nurse contented herself with expressing a pious wish that the very scoundrel who now cursed the child should live to praise him in still stronger terms—which indeed was the fact, for the God heard her prayer and, the child growing to be the lovely Cleobulus, Anacreon expiated a little curse with manifold praise.

LIFE OF ANACREON

this city could point to two Athenian houses which have united to produce so true a nobleman as the two from which you spring. The fame of your father's family, the house of Critias son of Diopides, has come down to us crowned with the praises accorded it by Anacreon, Solon, and many other poets for the beauty, the virtue, and the prosperity as it is called, of those who have belonged to it, the same is true of your mother's . . .

Scholast on Aeschylus Prometheus Bound. For Anacreon lived some time in Attica in the days of his passion for Critias, and took delight in the lyrics of Aeschylus.¹

Himemius Declamations. Anacreon tuned his lyre after the plague² and welcomed his dear loves (or his friends the Loves) again with music.

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner. Love is the almost constant theme of the wise Anacreon who is so familiar to us all. Compare the excellent Critias 'Teos brought unto Greece that sweet old weaver of womanish song, rouser of revels, cozener of dames, rival of the flute, lover of the lyre, the delightful, the anodyne. Never shall love of thee, Anacreon, grow old or die, so long as serving-lad bears round mixed wine for cups and deals bumpers about board, so long as maiden band does holy night-long service of the dance, so long as the scale-pan that is daughter of bronze sits upon the summit of the cottabus-pole ready for the throwing of the wine-drops.

[Lucian] Longevity. The lyric poet Anacreon lived eighty-five years, the lyric poet Stesichorus the same, and Simonides of Ceos over ninety

Valerius Maximus Memorable Deeds and Sayings: as in the case of Anacreon, who outlived the common span of human life, only to perish while nursing what poor strength was left him with a cup of raisin-wine, by the sticking of an obstinate grape-stone in his withered throat

Pausanias Description of Greece. On the Athenian Acropolis there are statues of Pericles son of Xanthippus and his father also who fought the Persians at Mycalè. Near Xanthippus stands Anacreon of Teos, the first poet excepting Sappho of Lesbos to make his chief theme love. The statue represents him as one singing in his cups

Palatine Anthology: All-enchanting noise of the wine, mother of fruit who bringest forth the crooked plait of the twisting tendril, grow lush and long, thou Vine, a-top the stone and little mound that are the tomb of Teian Anacreon, so shall the tipsing friend of neat liquor, who thumbed in night-long revel the lute of a lover of lads, yet spout above his buried head the glorious cluster of some teeming bough, and be wet evermore with the dew whose delicious scent was the breath of his mild old mouth gift for the birthday of Antonia, whose looks like her wit are beyond compare

Cicero Tusculan Disputations · Anacreon's poetical works are entirely erotic

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner According to Posidonius, Anacreon mentions three musical modes, the Phrygian, the Dorian, and the Lydian, these being the only modes he ever uses.

The Same [on fr. 45]. The great grammarian Aristarchus says in his note on these lines that the ancients used garlands of willow. But Tenarus declares that such garlands are not used by persons of refinement, and the other commentators¹ have made irrelevant remarks upon the passage.

Aelian Natural History [on fr. 52] The reference is to adulterers, and indeed Aristophanes of Byzantium stoutly opposes the view that we should read ἐροέσης 'charming' for κεροέσης 'hoined,' and I must say that I agree with him.

Seneca Letters to Lucilius The grammarian Didymus wrote four thousand books. I should pity him if he had merely read so many useless works. The list includes treatises in which he discusses the birthplace of Homer, the true mother of Aeneas, whether Anacreon was more of a rake than a sot, whether Sappho was a prostitute, and other questions the answers to which you ought to forget if you knew them. And then people complain that life is short.

Hephaestion On Poems A poem is known as 'common in form' when it is made up of two 'systems' or stanzas like the first poem of Anacreon.

To thee I kneel,³ thou shooter of deer, flax-haired child of Zeus, Artemis queen of wild beasts, who now doubtless lookest down rejoicing beside the eddies of Lethaeus upon a city of valiant hearts; for thou art shepherd to no savage flock of men⁴

For although according to the edition now in use the strophe has eight lines and the poem consists of a single strophe, this strophe can also be separated into a three-group and a five-group, so that a Pherecratic ends both the three line and the four-line systems⁵

Hephaestion Handbook of Metrics [on the Choriambic]: Eupolis in the Exempt from Service has used this form of verse very irregularly, sometimes he writes it thus . . . and sometimes like this 'And I always consorted with good sea beams,' so that it becomes a mixed choriambic like this of Anacreon.

I saw Simulus in the chorus with his pretty lyre
Sometimes again he has used it in other irregular shapes,

24

The Same [on the choriambic] A frequent variety of the choriambic tetrameter catalectic is that which has the second dipody iambic as well as the close; compare Anacreon

25²

The Same [just before] Anacreon throughout a whole poem has made the first dipody (of the choriambic tetrameter catalectic) of a tribrach and an iambus, so that there is 'resolution' common both to the choriambic and to the iambic³ 'Light-winged,' etc

Lucian The Gallic Hercules But when I remember that aged Heracles I begin to feel reckless and lose all shame to be doing such things at the statue's time of life, so strength and swiftness and beauty and all other bodily advantages may go hang, and your Love God, O poet of Teos, may 'fly by me,' etc

Light-winged I fly to Olympus to fetch master
Love, for lo! he will not play with me as he used to do, but he has seen that my beard is getting grey now, and so he flies by me in the wind of his golden-shining wings.

Scholias on the Iliad ['in anger over the dice'] Most of the 'individual' editions read 'in a quarrel over the dice,' using the feminine form of the word 'dice' and it is more Ionic, compare Anacreon:

The dice of Love are madneses and mellavs

48¹, 49

Hephaestion Handbook of Metre [on the Ionicum a minore]. And the brachycatalectic tetrameter is used for whole poems by Anacreon

Lo now! Love like a smith has smitten me with a great hammer and soused me in the chill stream

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on the luxury of Polycrates, tyrant of Samos] Indeed he was actually a rival in love to the poet Anacreon, and in a fit of rage cut his beloved's hair off

Aelian Historical Miscellanies Anacreon did not take upon himself to accuse Polycrates with coolness and determination, but shifted the blame to the beloved, in words in which he upbraided his rashness and ignorance in taking arms against his own hair. But the poem on the disaster to the hair must be sung by Anacreon; for he will sing it himself better than I

Favorinus in Stobaeus Anthology [against beauty]: And therefore Anacreon would seem to be ridiculous and captious in blaming the lad for having cut off some of his hair, in the words:

You have shorn a faultless flower of soft hair,
[arming your own hand against your tresses].

Choeroboscus on Hephaestion [on the combination of two syllables not separated by a consonant] Heliodorus in his Introduction says that even three syllables coalesce into one, for instance this double two-and a-half line which resembles an elegiac.

Asteris, neither I love you nor Apelles

For it is not an elegiac really, but the first part is a dactylic and the second an iambic, since it has two iambic feet and a syllable, so that the words φιλέω σὺ together make a short and one long

This man, who had been expelled from Athens, despite his former friendship for him, by Peisistratus' son Hipparchus, when Lasus of Hermione caught him in the act of foisting into the writings of Musaeus an oracle to the effect that the islands off Lemnos would disappear under the sea, had now become reconciled with the Peisistratids and come up with them to Susa to have audience of the King, and being given a flattering testimonial by his old friends repeated to him some of the oracles.

Theon of Smyrna Exposition of Things Mathematical in Plato [on the musical intervals] These intervals some writers thought to be derived from varying weight, others from varying size, others from varying vibrations Lasus of Hermione is said . . . to have investigated the various rates of vibration which produce the different intervals²

Plutarch Music It was Lasus of Hermione who by transferring the rhythms (prosodiac, choee, and bacchus) to the sphere of the dithyramb, and by adapting to it, in imitation of the polyphony of the flute, a more extensive and at the same time more finely divided scale, produced a change in the existing system of music

Scholias on Pindar ['whence sprang the graces of Dionysus and their ox-winning dithyramb?'] We are to understand it thus —the graces of the dithyrambs of Dionysus appeared at Corinth, that is, the finest of Dionysus' dithyrambs first appeared there For it was at Corinth that the dancing-choirs first appeared, and the originator of it was Anion of Methymna, who was followed by Lasus of Hermione

- Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on fish] I know too the sallies of Lasus of Hermione on this subject, as given by Chamaeleon of Heiaclea in his Account of Lasus, where he says 'Lasus used to declare that raw fish was ὀπτός 'cooked,' and when, as many people did, his interlocutor showed his amazement, he tried to make out that since what is to be heard is ἀκουστός or 'audible' and what is to be thought is νοητός or 'conceivable,' therefore, since a fish is to be seen, it is ὀπτός or 'visible' [which also means 'cooked'] And one day, by way of a joke, he purloined a fish from some fishermen, and gave it to one of the bystanders, and then took a solemn oath that he neither had it himself nor knew that anybody else had taken it, which he was able to do because he had taken it himself and another man had it, and this man had his instructions to swear that he neither had taken it himself nor knew that anybody else had it—which he in like manner could do because he had it and Lasus had taken it

Plutarch False Shame This disease, then, being the cause of many ills, it behoves us to eradicate by treatment. Suppose, for instance, a fellow-guest asks you to play dice over the wine. Do not be put out of countenance or be afraid you are being made fun of, but imitate Xenophanes, who when Lasus of Hermione called him a coward for refusing to play dice with him, agreed that he was a coward, and a great coward, over unseemly things²

I HYMN TO THE HERMIONIAN DEMETER

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on the Aeolian ‘mode’]. The Aeolian character, on the other hand, is one that gives itself airs and does the grand, and indeed is inclined to be conceited — which agrees with their horse breeding and their ways of entertaining guests —, there is no real wickedness in it, but it is high spirited and self-confident. And that is why the Aeolians are so given to wine, women, and luxurious living. Thus it is that they have the character of the mode known as Hypodorian, which is the same, according to Heraclides, as what they called Aeolian, as indeed Lasus of Hermione calls it in his Hymn to the Hermionian Demeter, which begins thus.

Demeter I sing and the Maiden that was the wife of Clymenus, leading a honey-voiced hymn by way of the deep noted mode Aeolian, though this is always sung as Hypodorian

The Same [on poems written without s] According to Heraclides of Pontus in the the 3rd Book of his Treatise on Music, Lasus’ Hymn to the Hermionian Demeter also is asigmatic—the hymn which begins ‘Demeter I sing’

LIFE

Ptolemaeus Hephaestion in Photius Library It is said that upon the death of Demetrius of Scepsis a copy of Tellis was found on his pillow, and similarly that the Dying Women of Alcman (?)¹ was found beside Tynnichus²

PAEAN

Porphyrus On Abstaining from Animal Food. When Aeschylus was asked by the Delphians to write a Paean to Apollo, he is said to have replied that Tynnichus had written an excellent one already, and that any paean he might write would be at as great a disadvantage as a modern statue in comparison with an old one, for the latter though simply executed was considered divine, while the modern statue might be marvelled at for its elaborate workmanship but gave less conviction as a representation of the deity it portrayed Plato Ion Since, then, the many noble things the poets compose and say on any subject, like you on Homer, are not the result of art but of a divine dispensation, they are able to acquit themselves well only in a kind to which they are directed by the Muse. be it the dithyramb, the eulogy, the dance-song, the epic, or the iambic, in all other kinds their performance is second rate. A good example of what I mean is seen in Tynnichus of Chalers, who never composed anything worth remembering but the Paean sung everywhere, which is well-nigh the finest lyric poem ever written, truly, as he himself calls it,

an invention of the Muses

TELESILLA

LIFE

Pausanias Description of Greece [on Aigoi]. Above the theatre there is a temple of Aphrodite, and in front of the seated statue of the Goddess is a slab engraved with a figure of Telesilla the writer of the poems. These lie as though thrown down beside her feet, and she herself is looking at a helmet which she holds in her hand and is about to put upon her head. Telesilla was famous among women for her poetry, but still more famous for the following achievement. Her fellow-citizens had sustained an indescribable disaster at the hands of the Spartans under Cleomenes son of Anaxandrides. Some had fallen in the actual battle, and of the others, who took sanctuary in the grove of Argus, some had at first ventured out under a truce only to be slaughtered, and the rest realising the enemy's treachery had stayed behind only to be burnt to death when he fired the grove. By these means Cleomenes, proceeding to Aigoi, led his Lacedaemonians against a city of women. But Telesilla took all the slaves and all such male citizens as through youth or age had been unable to bear arms, and made them man the walls, and gathering together all the weapons of war that had been left in the houses or were hanging in the temples, armed the younger women and marshalled them at a place she knew the enemy must pass. There, undismayed by the war-city, the women stood then ground and fought with the greatest determination, till the Spartans, reflecting that the slaughter of an army of women would be but an equivocal victory and defeat at their hands dishonour as well as disaster, laid down their arms. Now this battle had been foretold by the Pythian priestess, and Herodotus, whether he understood it or not, quotes the oracle as follows

When male by female's put to flight
And Argos' name with honour's bought,
Many an Argive wife shall show
Both cheeks marked with scars of woe ¹

Such is the part of the oracle which refers to the women ²

Plutarch Feminine Virtue No less famous than these collective deeds is the fight in which Cleomenes was driven from Argos by the poetess Telesilla. This woman, we are told, though the daughter of a doughty line, was of a sickly habit of body, and sent one day to the God to enquire how she might improve her health. When his reply came that she must pay court to the Muses, she obeyed him by devoting herself to poetry and music, and with such good effect that before very long she had both rid herself of her disorder and become the wonder of her fellow-countrywomen for her skill in poesy. And when the Spartan king Cleomenes, after great slaughter of the Argives—not however, as some authorities would have us believe,³ to the number of seven thousand seven hundred seventy and seven—advanced upon the city, etc. Those of the

LIFE

Strabo Geography Ceos was originally a tetrapolis, but only two of the four remain as separate cities, Iulis and Carthaea, the former having absorbed Coresia and the latter Poreessa. Iulis was the birth-place of the lyric poet Simonides and of his nephew Bacchylides, and later of the physician Erasistratus and the Peripatetic philosopher Ariston. There appears to have been a law here, mentioned by Menander in the lines 'The Cean custom takes my fancy still, | The man who can't live well shall not live ill,' whereby, in order to make the supplies go round, all citizens who had reached the age of sixty should drink the hemlock¹

Herodotus Histories Following upon their track, the Persians came up with the flying Ionians at Ephesus, and when they turned and showed fight inflicted upon them a severe defeat, after which they put to the sword a number of well-known men, including the Eretrian commander Eualcides, who had taken the prize at crown-contests in the Games and been highly eulogised by Simonides of Ceos

¹ hence partly perh. S's voluntary exile after middle age, had the law been enforced in his case, much of his finest extant work would never have been done

LIFE OF SIMONIDES

Kingdom of Cambyses and Darius, The Sea-fight with Xerxes, The Sea-fight off Artemisium, these in elegiacs, The Sea-fight at Salamis in lyric metre, Duoges, Eulogies, Inscriptions, Paeans, Tragedies, etc This Simonides had a very remarkable memory ¹

Life of Aeschylus According to some authorities, Aeschylus was defeated by Simonides in the competition for an elegy on those who fell at Marathon ² For the elegiac metre requires the fineness of detail which is associated with the rousing of sympathy, and that, as we have said, is foreign to Aeschylus

Aristophanes Birds POET I've written some lyrics to your Cloudcuckooborough, a lot of fine dithyrambs and some maiden-songs, and—you know, the Simonides tick

Scholiast on the passage Simonides seems to have been the first to connect poetry with meanness of disposition and to write it for pay, which is what Pindar hints at in his Isthmians (2 10), where he says, 'For the Muse was no seeker of gain then, nor worked for hire . . .'

LIFE OF SIMONIDES

Scholias*t on the passage of Pindar* He means that nowadays they compose victory-songs for pay, a custom begun by Simonides¹

Plutarch Should Old Men Govern? Simonides said to the friends who accused him of penuriousness, that the pleasure of making profit was the one and only pleasure he had left to tend him in his old age

Stobaeus Anthology When Simonides was asked why at his advanced age he was so careful of his money, he replied, 'It is because I should rather leave money for enemies when I die than stand in need of friends while I live, for I know too well how few friendships last.'

Plato Republic 'But still,' said I, 'I find it difficult to disbelieve a great and inspired artist like Simonides'²

From a Papyrus of the 3rd Century B.C. On Expenditure.—Simonides The following sayings of his are also esteemed for their truth to nature When asked by the wife of Hiero if all things grew old, he replied 'Yes, all, except love of gain, and acts of kindness sooner than anything else' Again, when he was asked why he was so penurious, he answered that it was because he got more vexation from debit than from credit; either was really negligible, though both derived importance from the passions and unreasonableness of men; and so neither of them did him any harm, or, strictly speaking, any good, but it was unwise to use another man's staff instead of one's own, moreover, borrowed money might cost little at the moment, but in the end it cost twice as much, and so we ought to count every penny¹ Lastly he declared that when he consumed only the necessary and natural food of man, simple food like that of the animals, he was borrowing from himself²

Introduction to Theocritus 16 (cf I 10) The story goes that Simonides kept two boxes, the one for fees and the other for favours, and whenever any friend came asking a favour, he had the boxes brought in and opened before him, and cut short his importunity by discovering the favour-box to be empty and the fee-box full³

Theocritus Many indeed were the bondmen earned their monthly meed in the houses of Antiochus and King Aleuas, many the calves that went lowing with the horned kine home to byres of the Scopads, and ten thousand were the fine sheep that the shepherds of the plain of Crannon watched all night for the hospitable Creondae, but once all the sweet wine of their life was in the great cup, once they were embarked in the barge of the old man loathsome, the joyance and pleasure of those things was theirs no more and though they left behind them all that great and noble wealth, they had lain among the vile dead long ages unremembered, had not the great Ceian cried sweet varied lays to the stings and famed them in posterity, and had not the couriers that came home to them victorious out of the Games achieved the honour and glory which called the poet to his task

By this he implies the possession of great riches, so as to be able to feed many retainers 'But all the same,' says he, 'then wealth would have been of no avail for the preservation of their glory, had their praises not been sung by Simonides'. The Scopads were Ciannonians by birth, and Ciannon is a city of Thessaly, birth-place of Scopas son of Cleon and Echecrateia Compare Simonides in the Duges. By 'the great Ceian' he means Simonides, who wrote victory-songs and duges for the aforesaid great Thessalians

Plutarch On Listening to Poetry: And that is why, when they asked Simonides why the Thessalians were the only people he never cheated, he replied 'They are too great dunces'

Diogenes Laertius Lives of the Philosophers: According to Aristotle in the 3rd Book of his Treatise on Poetry (f 65) Antimemidas and Alcaeus had a feud with Pittacus, Sosibius with Anaxagoras, and Timocleon with Simonides¹

Plato Republic (SOCRATES and POLEMARCHUS) What do you say, said I, that Simonides rightly says about justice?—That justice is to give every man his due

Stobaeus Anthology Simonides.—When a friend of his once told Simonides that he was hearing a great deal of slander about him, he replied 'Be so good as to stop defaming me with your ears'

Plutarch Garrulity. In all things and for all these reasons we ought to bear in mind the saying of Simonides, that he had often repented speaking but had never repented holding his tongue time, till at last, when the wondering Hiero asked him to explain his strange behaviour, he replied that it was because the longer he thought about it, the more obscure it became. I believe that the truth is that Simonides, of whom tradition speaks not only as a delightful poet but in all respects a wise and learned man, despaired of the true answer because so many subtle definitions occurred to him that he could not decide among them.

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner. If we may believe Chamaeleon, Simonides' niggardliness is a real fact. For instance at Syracuse, where Hiero was in the habit of sending him daily a portion of food, Simonides used openly to sell most of it and keep only a small part for himself, and once, when he was asked the reason, replied that he did so as a testimony to Hiero's munificence and his own moderation.¹

Plutarch Life of Aratus. Even if it be a terrible thing to deal thus with one's fellow-clansmen and kinsfolk by anger, still in Simonides' words 'In time of necessity even harshness is sweet,' healing as it were and restoring the spirit when it is sick and fevered.

Timaeus quoted by the Scholiast on Pindar: Thus Theron took umbrage on behalf both of his daughter (Demarete) and her husband (Polyzelus), and made war upon Polyzelus' brother Hiero, advancing to the Sicilian river Gela. But not a blow was struck, and the war came to nothing. For we are told that the lyric poet Simonides came up in the nick of time and reconciled the two kings.²

Aristotle Metaphysics: All these things are irrational, and inconsistent both with one another and with what is rational, and we may apply to them the term 'a long story' as it is used by Simonides, a long story in that sense being the kind of account given by a slave when he will not talk sense

Alexander of Aphrodisias on the passage These words will be clear to any reader who has been told what is meant by the λόγος of Simonides. This writer, in what he calls his Ἀτακτοὶ Λόγοι or Prose Conversations,¹ imitates [that is, gives a literary representation of] the answers erring slaves will generally make when their masters are enquiring why they have blundered, and makes them give extremely long and verbose excuses which have no sense—that is, plausibility—but are entirely off the point. This would seem to be characteristic of foreign birth and lack of education

Pindar Olympians. Skilled is the man who knoweth much by nature, they that have but learnt—even as a pair of crows, gluttonous in their wordiness, these chatter vain things against the divine bid of Zeus Plutarch Musica. Panyates usually avoided the chromatic scale, though he used it occasionally, thus showing that he did not avoid it from ignorance. Indeed he tells us himself that he imitates the musical style of Pindar and Simonides and, generally, what is now called the ancient style.

Longinus the Rhetorician. Simonides and many after him have pointed out paths to remembrance, counselling us to compare images and localities in order to remember names and events, but there is nothing more in it than the concatenation and co-observation of the apparently new with what is similar to it.

Cicero On the Chief Good and the Chief Evil: Is it in our power to remember or to forget? When Themistocles was once promised—by Simonides I think it was—a handbook of mnemonics or guide to remembrance, ‘I should prefer,’ he exclaimed, ‘a guide to forgetfulness, for I remember things I would not and cannot forget what I would.’¹ Scholast on Dionysius of Thrace [on the Alphabet]. As for the inventors of the remaining eight letters, namely the two long vowels, the three double letters, and the three aspirates, it is clear that Simonides of Ceos invented the Η, the Ω, the Ξ and the Ψ, and Palamedes the Θ, the Φ, the Χ, and the Ζ, though some authorities ascribe these last four (?) to Epichaimus of Syracuse.

Plutarch Should Old Men Govern? Simonides won the chorus prize in his old age.²

LIFE OF SIMONIDES

Lucian Longevity Simonides of Ceos lived to be over ninety ¹

Suidas Leucon · Simonides (3rd notice) . . . There was an Agrigentine General named Phoenix who, in the course of a war with Syracuse, with cynical ruthlessness pulled down the tomb of Simonides and made a bastion of the stones. At that spot the city was taken ². This story would seem to be confirmed by Callimachus of Cyrene, who deploras the outrage and makes this writer of delightful verse say 'neither had he respect for the writing thereon which declared that beneath lay the son of Leopiepes of Ceos'; and a little further on. 'nor yet had he any fear of you brethren, O Polydeuces, who made me, alone of all the guests, pass out ere the roof fell, when the house at Cnannon came down alas! upon the mighty Scopadae.

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner : Compare the author of the play called The Helots. 'It's old-fashioned to sing Stesichorus, Alcman, or Simonides, but we can hear Gnesippus . . .

Scholast on Aristophanes Wasps ['mind you take up the catch properly'] It was an old custom for guests at table to continue where the first singer left off. The guest who began held a sprig of bay or myrtle and sang a lyric of Simonides or Stesichorus as far as he chose, and then handed the sprig to another, making his choice of a successor with no regard to the order in which the guests were seated.

Quintilian Guide to Oratory [the Nine Lyric Poets] Simonides, though in other respects not a commanding figure, may be praised for his choice of expression and for a certain sweetness, but his chief excellence lies in his pathos, indeed some critics

21 ON THOSE WHO FELL AT THERMOPYLÆ¹

Diodorus of Sicily Historical Library And for this their valour has been lauded not only by the historians but by many of the poets, and among these the lyric Simonides, who wrote them a eulogy worthy of their noble deed, in which he says:

To them that fell at Thermopylae belong a glorious fortune and a noble lot, for grave they have an altar, for libation-ewers remembrance, and the wine that comes thereof is praise. Such burial neither shall Decay darken, nor Time the all-vanquisher bedim.² This shrine of brave men hath taken for its keeper the fair fame of Greece, witness Leonidas the king of Sparta by token of the great ornament of valour and the everlasting glory that he hath left behind

Stobaeus Anthology [That human prosperity is uncertain because Fortune turns so easily] From the Dirges of Simonides.

If thou be'st a mortal man, never say what To-morrow will bring, nor when thou seest a man happy, how long he shall be happy. For swift is change—nay, not so swift the changing course of the wide-wingèd fly.¹

23 ON THE SCOPADS

Scholast on Theocritus ['the Scopads'] These were of Crannon, which is a city of Thessaly whence came Scopas son of Creon and Echecrateia Compare Simonides in the Dirges

The Same ['the Ceian bard'] That is, Simonides, because he wrote Victory Songs and Dirges for the aforesaid famous Thessalians

24 ON ANTIOCHUS

Aristides Oration [The funeral speech on Eteoneus]. What Simonides, what Pindar shall bewail such a thing as this? What tune or word shall Stesichorus find worthy of so great a calamity? What Dyseris of Thessaly ever made such lament for the death of an Antiochus, as this mother makes for her son?

Stobaeus Anthology [That life is short, of little account, and full of care]. From the Duiges of Simonides.

For even they that were of old time and were born half-immortal sons of most high Gods, came not unto old age without toil, nor without the malice of men, nor without peril.

27¹

Dionysius of Halicarnassus [On verse composition which greatly resembles prose]. Take from the lyric poetry this of Simonides, which is here written² with the pause-marks corresponding not to the metrical lines arranged by Aristophanes of Byzantium or another, but to the requirements of the words treated as prose. Pray consider the poem and read this part of it according to the pause-marks, and you may be quite sure that the rhythm of the poem will escape you and you will be unable to pick out strophe, antistrophe, or epode; the poem will appear to you mere prose. It is Danae on the sea, bewailing her fate

When the wind came blowing upon the carven chest and the swaying sea bent her towards fear and tears that would not be stayed from her cheeks, she threw a loving arm round Peiseus, saying, 'O babe, what woe is thine¹ and yet thou weepst not, but slumberest in thy suckling's way as thou liest Plutarch Letter of Consolation to Apollonius: For Simonides says.

Little is man's strength and his cares unavailing, that will not be escaped, in which both good men

Diogenes Laertius [on Cleobūlus]: This man composed poems and riddles to the amount of 3000 lines, and is considered by some writers to be the author of the Epitaph on Midas 'A maiden of brass am I, and I lie on the tomb of Midas. So long as water shall flow and tall trees grow green, sun rise and shine and moon give light, rivers run and sea wash shore, ever shall I abide upon this sore-lamented tomb and tell the passers-by that this is the grave of Midas.' And they find evidence for this in a poem of Simonides, where he says

Who that hath understanding would praise Cleobulus the man of Lindus for his pitting of the might of a gravestone against the ever-running rivers and the flowers of the Spring, against the flame of sun and of golden moon, and against the eddies of the ocean-wave? All these are subject to the Gods, but a stone, even mortal hands may break it. This is the rede of a fool

Lucian On Behalf of the Pictures But think how a famous poet praised Glaucus saying

Neither the might of Polydeuces would have left hand against him, nay, nor the iron child of Alcmena³

Do you see to what Gods he likened him, or rather declared him to surpass? And neither was Glaucus himself offended at being praised at the expense of the Gods who are guardians of athletes, nor did those Gods punish either Glaucus or the poet for impiety. Far from it, both of them received honour and glory from all Greece, the one for his strength and the other for no poem that he wrote more than for this⁴

43 FOR SCOPAS

Cicero On the Orator: I am grateful to Simonides of Ceos for his invention—if his it was—of the art of mnemonics. For there is a story that one day when Simonides was dining at Crannon in Thessaly with a wealthy noble named Scopas, and sang a song which he had written in his honour and which contained by way of poetic ornament much praise of Castor and Pollux, Scopas ungenerously remarked that he should give the poet only half of the price agreed for it, he must please to go for the rest to the precious deities who had received half his praise. Shortly afterwards, having received a message that two young men wanted him urgently outside, Simonides rose from the table and went to the door, only to find nobody there. That very moment Scopas' dining-chamber collapsed, and he and his perished in the ruins. Now when their kinsfolk wished to bury them they found it was impossible to identify the remains. But we are told that Simonides was able from his recollection of the place each guest occupied at table to do so for them in every case. This it was, they say, which led to his discovery that the chief aid to memory is arrangement.²

Scholiast on Pindar ['how once before the walls of Daidanus the Corinthians were thought to be turning the issues of fights either way']. The Corinthians distinguished themselves on both sides at Troy, fighting both with the Trojans and with the Greeks. And this is why Simonides says:

Troy is not wroth with the men of Corinth, Greeks though they be;
for they were allies of both sides

But according to Simonides the sail given by Aegeus was not white, but Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on love] Sophocles (according to Ion) said to the guest sitting next him, 'What a pretty phrase that is of Phrynichus. "The light of love shines upon crimson cheeks"' Whereupon the Eretrian or Elythraean—and he was an elementary schoolmaster—exclaimed, 'You may be very clever, Sophocles, at poetry; but all the same, Phrynichus was wrong in calling the cheeks of the pretty one crimson. If the painter were to put crimson on this lad's cheeks, he would no longer be pretty. And therefore what is pretty ought not to be likened to what is not so.' To which Sophocles replied with a smile at the Eretrian, 'Then, sir, this of Simonides, highly approved by our countrymen in general, will likewise meet your censure.'

The maid sent forth speech from her crimson lips

Plutarch Dinner-Table Problems [What features Poetry and Dancing have in common]: In short the saying of Simonides must be changed, he said, from painting to dancing, and we must say (not that painting but) that the dance is a silent poetry and poetry a speaking dance. And it would appear that, as if it were a matter of painting, the poems themselves are like the colours, and the dances to which they belong like the outlines which the colours fill. And the poet who is thought to have done his best and most expressive work in the Hyporcheme or Dance-Song proves that the two arts (of dancing and poetry) stand in need of one another, compare:

Come pursue the curving course of the tune, and imitate with foot a-whirl in the contest unapproachable horse or Amyclean hound, or this.

And even as on the windy Dotian plain a hound doth fly to find death for a hornèd hind, and she turns the head upon her neck this, that, and every way

and the rest —these passages may almost be said to call down the subject matter of the dance from heaven above, and to pull and guide one's hands and feet, or rather one's whole body, with the puppet-strings of its music, the body being

91¹ ON THE SEA-FIGHT AT SALAMIS

Plutarch Themistocles. The rest, their inferiority in numbers being compensated by the narrowness of the strait, which both prevented the Barbarians from using their whole force at once and caused their ships to fall foul of one another, held out till fall of night

as Simonides says, and thus won a great and famous victory which outshone any deed of the sea whether Greek or Barbarian, alike in the fire and courage of the men and in the genius of their leader.

92² ON THE BATTLE OF PLATAEA

Plutarch The Maliginity of Herodotus: But of the Corinthians and their position in the battle, and what they gained from the conflict at Plataea, we may learn from Simonides, who writes:

Midmost stood the dwellers in Ephyræ of the many fountains, men veised in every virtue of war and this

And those that live in Corinth town, the city of Glaucus, made unto themselves a right noble witness of their deeds by honouring the gold that is in the sky,³ and that gold doth increase and spread wide their fame and the fame of their fathers, for whereas gold is the kindest of all hosts when it shineth in the sky, [it comes an evil guest unto those that receive it in their hand]⁴

He has not said this in any work for which he trained a chorus at Corinth nor in any poem written in honour of that city, but has simply recorded their deeds in an elegiac poem

But there's one saying of the man of Chios ² which passes all, 'The life of man is even as the life of a green leaf', yet few that receive it with the ear lay it away in the breast, for there's a hope which springeth in every heart that is young, and so long as man possesseth the flowery bloom of youth there is much that his light heart deems to have no end, counting neither on age nor death, and taking no thought for sickness in time of health. Poor fools they to think so, and not to know that the time of youth and life is but short for such as be mortal! Wherefore be thou wise in time, and fail not when the end is near to give thy soul freely of the best.

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: With regard to hares Chamaeleon relates in his book On Simonides that when supping once with Hiero, the poet was left out when the jugged hare was served to the guests, whereupon as Hiero was sending him some, he improvised the following parody¹

Wide though it was, it could not reach to me.

113, 114

The Same. Verses of the nature of riddles were composed also by Simonides, if we may believe Chamaeleon of Heraclea in his book on that poet, let me quote these:

The father of the wayward kid,
The child of eve upon each lid,
With the fell fish lies jowl by cheek,
And so my quest is still to seek
For they refuse their aid to lend
Lord Bacchus' butcher-knight to mend.

Some explain it thus. . . Others say it was the custom at Iulis that the ox to be sacrificed to Dionysus should be killed with an axe by a boy. The festival being near, the axe had been sent to be repaired, and Simonides, who was then a lad, was sent off to the blacksmith's to fetch it. Finding the man asleep and his bellows and tongs lying on the ground end to end, he returned to his companions and put to them the above conundrum. For the 'father of the kid' is the bellows, the 'fell fish' the 'crab' or tongs, 'the child of eve' sleep, and 'Bacchus' butcher-knight' the axe. There is another piece by Simonides which puzzles readers who do not know the story.

SIMONIDES

Now it is said that the poet used to stay at Carthaea¹ while training the choruses there, and the training-school being high up by the temple of Apollo and far from the sea, all the chorus-men, including the pupils of Simonides, fetched their water from the spring in the lower part of the town. This they did by means of a jackass which they called Epeus after the Epeus who carries water for the Atreidae in the Trojan story, a story which was depicted on the walls of the temple of Apollo near which they were training. Now it was arranged that any chorister who came late should provide the jackass with a quart of barley. This is what is referred to in the verses, he who would not be winner of the cricket's prize means he who would not [learn to] sing,² the son of Panopeus means the jackass, and the dinner the quart of barley.

Scholias on Pindar [‘Among them blooms Ares in the terrible spears of the young men] According to Theopompus, the Corinthian women, too, went to the temple of Aphrodite and prayed to her that their men should be filled with love of the battle for Greece against the Medes and he declares that the following elegiac poem which was dedicated there is still to be seen on the left hand as you enter the temple. ‘These’ etc

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner According to Chamaeleon of Heraclea in his book On Pindar, it is an ancient custom at Corinth that when the city makes supplication to Aphrodite in any great crisis, the intercession shall be attended by as many as possible of the courtesans,¹ who shall pray to the Goddess and afterwards be present at the sacrifice. Accordingly when Greece was invaded by the Persian, the Corinthian courtesans, if we may believe Theopompus and the 7th Book of Timaeus, went to Aphrodite’s temple and prayed for the salvation of Greece. And thus it was that when the Corinthians dedicated to the Goddess the tablet which is still extant and inscribed on it the name of each of the courtesans who had made that intercession and afterwards attended the sacrifice, the following inscription was dedicated along with it by Simonides : ‘These’ etc

Plutarch Malignity of Herodotus And yet the fact that the women of Corinth, and they only of all the women of Greece, made that wonderful and beautiful prayer that the Goddess should fill their men with love of the battle against the barbarians, was probably well-known to the remotest Carian, let alone Herodotus. Indeed it was matter of common talk, and when bronze images were dedicated in the temple of Aphrodite an inscription was composed for them by Simonides to the following effect

These women were dedicated in effigy after that they had made public intercession to the Cyprian for Greece and for their fair-fighting fellow-countrymen, <that she should fill their men with love of Thucydides History The Spartan nobles carefully investigated Pausanias' behaviour to see if he had departed from the established customs, and among other things fastened upon the following personal eulogy which he had seen fit some time before to have inscribed upon the tripod which the Greeks dedicated at Delphi as an offering from the spoil of the Medes (at Plataea).

When Pausanias in command of the Greeks destroyed the Median host he dedicated this memorial unto Phoebus

This inscription was now at once erased by the Spartans, who engraved upon the offering the names of all the cities which had set it up after their combined defeat of the Barbarian ²

Aristides On the Four Great Athenians: At the river Eurymedon having won on both elements in the same day, Cimon set up commemorative monuments of fights both by sea and by land, and thus, amazed as the poets were by the earlier deeds of glory done when the Barbarians invaded Greece, one of them nevertheless sang of the later achievements—not indeed of all of them, but of those that were done on a certain single day.³

Since the day the sea parted Europe from Asia and the impetuous War-God first haunted the cities of mankind, no fairer deed of earthly men ever befel at once on land and sea. For these men first destroyed many of the Medes ashore and then took a hundred ships of the Phoenicians on the sea, ships and shipmen too, and loud were Asia's laments when she found herself smitten with both of their mightily-warring hands.⁴

Scholast on Pindar ['Eileithuia that sittest beside the Fates'] Aristodemus the pupil of Aristarchus gives a better account — Sogenes [the winning boy¹] was born to Theaion when he was advanced in years, in answer to a prayer to the Goddess, and so the birth of his son was as it were a favour of Eileithuia. Thus it is owing to the peculiar circumstances of the athlete's birth that the poet thus addresses the Goddess. Aristodemus' view was based on an Inscription of Simonides.

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner χορωνόν 'wreath': Apion in his book On the Latin Language declares that what is now called στέφανος was anciently known as χορωνόν because it was used by the χορευταί or chorus men in the theatres, who both wore a wreath themselves and competed for one, compare this passage in the Inscriptions of Simonides, where the word χορωνόν occurs.

[Longinus] On the Sublime [on 'images']. The imagery of Sophocles is of supreme excellence where the dying Oedipus goes to his grave amidst a gathering tempest, and also where, as the Greeks set sail from Troy, Achilles appears to them over his tomb, and yet the latter image could hardly be more vividly employed than it is by Simonides. But it is impracticable to quote every case in point.

211

Scholiast on the Iliad ['Nastes and Amphimachus, the glorious children of Nomion, and he came moreover to the war with a gold trinket like a girl']. The marginal mark is because 'he' refers to Amphimachus, though Simonides took it of Nastes and because the meaning is not that he came with golden arms, as again Simonides would have it, but with a gold ornament.

212

Scholiast on Pindar ['Among the Corinthians is the sweet-breathed Muse']: that is, they are musical, for Corinth had very famous poets, including Arion, who is mentioned by Simonides.

213

Scholiast on the Iliad ['daughter of Marpessa'] Idas, the reputed son of Aphareus but true son of Poseidon, by race a Lacedaemonian, desiring a wife, went to Ortygia in Chalcis and carried away thence Euenus' daughter Marpessa, travelling speedily with horses of Poseidon. Going forth to seek his daughter, Euenus came to the river Lycormas in Aetolia and there sank down, whence the Lycormas came to be known as the Euenus. But nigh to Arenè Idas was met by Apollo, who laid hold on Marpessa, whereat Idas stretched bow and began to fight him for his bride. Then became Zeus judge between them, and bade Marpessa choose her man, when for fear Apollo would leave her when she grew old, she chose Idas. Such is Simonides' elaboration of the story.

LIFE

Suidas Lexicon Timocreon —Of Rhodes, a playwright of the Old Comedy. He was at enmity with the lyric poet Simonides, and also with the Athenian Themistocles, of whom he composed a censure in the form of a song. He wrote among other things a comedy directed against the same Themistocles and the lyrist Simonides ¹

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on gluttony]: Timocreon the poet of Rhodes and five-event champion was both toper and trencherman, as is shown by the epitaph ²

Thy guttling o'er, thy tippling done,
Thou'rt lying still, Timocreon

And indeed Thiasymachus of Chalcedon informs us in one of his Introductions that when Timocreon became the guest of the Persian King he took every advantage of his table; once, when the King asked what he was feeding himself up for, he replied, 'To give innumerable Persians a sound thrashing,' and the next day defeated a large number of them one by one, and then stood beating the air, explaining to his wondering host that he had all these blows to spare if anybody would come on ³

Plutarch Life of Themistocles The lyric poet Timocreon of Rhodes makes a very bitter attack on Themistocles in a song, on the ground that he had taken bribes to contrive the restoration of other exiles, but for lucre's sake had left his friend and host Timocreon in the lurch The song is as follows:

O you may praise Pausanias, or you again Xanthippus, or you perhaps Leotychidas, but I praise Aristides as the finest man of all that hail from holy Athens now that Leto hateth Themstocles, the liar, the cheat, the traitor who for a bribe of rascally silver-pieces kept his old friend Timocreon an exile from his native Ialysus, and sailed off to the devil with three talents of silver, restoring, expelling or killing as he would, choke-full of his silver-pieces; and at the Isthmus played the scoundrelly innkeeper and gave them meat that was cold, meat that they ate with curses on his head.

After Themistocles' flight and condemnation Timocreon gives far more of a loose to his invective in the song which begins:

Make, Muse, this song a bye-word in Greece, as it is meet and just it should be.

Timocreon is said to have been banished for showing Persian sympathies, and Themistocles to have participated in the adverse ballot. And so, when Themistocles was accused of the same offence, Timocreon composed upon him these lines:

So it is not only Timocreon who takes oaths to help the Medes, it seems there's other scoundrels. I'm not the only curtail; there's other foxes like me
