2018 CHAMPIONSHIPS

HIGHLIGHTS

Kentucky claims second national title in school history: Powered by stout execution from air rifle national champion Henrik Larsen, junior Hanna Carr and the rest of the Wildcats, the fourth-seeded Kentucky rifle team claimed its second national title at the 2018 NCAA Championships, hosted by The Citadel. Despite coming up short against No. 1 West Virginia at the Great American Rifle Conference Championships, the Wildcats edged the Mountaineers by nine points to take the crown from the five-time defending national champions.

"I couldn't be more proud of this team," head coach Harry Mullins said. "The team worked through obstacles to enhance their performance. Their embracement of facing the challenge and overcoming things all season was a large part of their success this weekend. Throughout the whole tournament, they never panicked and pushed for every point. I knew we had a special group from top to bottom at the beginning of the season."

On day one, Kentucky posted its second-highest smallbore score of the season, 2,345, and headed into air rifle with an 18-point advantage. The Wildcats then shot 2,372 in air rifle to combine for its highest aggregate score of the season at 4,717. Of its 23 seasons making the field at the championships, Kentucky has 13 top-three finishes. The Wildcats last won the title in 2011.

Larsen, the NCAA Freshman and Shooter of the Year, whose father traveled from Norway to watch him win the air rifle championship, shot the fourth-highest score (596) in the team portion following his top 592 in smallbore for an 1,188 aggregate score. In the final, Larsen trailed at first before storming back to shoot a 249.4. The freshman is the first Wildcat to win the individual air rifle NCAA title since Connor Davis in 2014.

Carr just missed the air rifle final by two shots, but still managed to post a 593 – her third-highest score this season. In fact, it was freshman Hailee Sigmon (595), who finished eighth in air rifle and edged Carr for the final spot. Billy Azzinaro and Cathryn Papasodora shot in the second relay on day two and pushed the pressure aside as they stay composed to fire 587 and 588, respectively, to help clinch for the Cats.

Mountaineers' sophomore Morgan Phillips successfully defended her 2017 NCAA smallbore title. The Salisbury, Maryland, native clawed her way to the individual championship with a 459.4 final showing.

Phillips sat in fifth place in the final after the prone series and jumped five spots to first after the first five recorded shots in standing. She entered the knockout stage with a 0.5 lead over second place and never relinquished her advantage.

No. 2-ranked TCU finished third with a 4,701 score, and No. 3 Murray State placed fourth with a 4,684 total.

Air Force shot 4,669 and placed fifth, while Alaska-Fairbanks finished sixth with a 4,667 score. Ohio State (4,664) and Nebraska (4,655) finished seventh and eighth overall.

(From 1980 to 2004, the championship consisted of 120 shots by each competitor in smallbore, and 40 shots per competitor in air rifle. Since 2005, the championship has consisted of 60 shots for both smallbore and air rifle. Additionally, since 2011, each team may have five competitors shoot with the top four scores in each discipline counting toward the team's score.)
