Why is it that the

Chickering Piano

is preferred by those who are admittedly the best judges of tone? The answer is easy. It is because every one who has played the Chickering knows that in it is embodied every artistic quality—that it meets every demand of the expert required for the truest interpretation of music—that it possesses that indescribable, delicate charm which is difficult to analyze, but which is designated by some musicians, who appreciate that it can correctly portray every varying emotion, as the “soul” of the Chickering.
