

The Duke of York's Laws, 1665-75.

The Duke of York's Laws for the government of the Colony of New York were compiled from the statutes for the government of the other English colonies in America, under the direction of Nicolls, the first English Governor. They were promulgated at Hempstead, on Long Island, March 1, 1665, and copies were transmitted to the several ridings, constituting the shire of Yorkshire. A copy of these laws, known as the "East Hampton copy," is filed in the clerk's office of the town of East Hampton, in the County of Suffolk. Another copy was filed in the clerk's office of Hempstead, where the laws were promulgated, but on the erection of the town of North Hempstead from the town of Hempstead, the records of the town, including the "Duke's Laws," were transferred to the clerk's office of the town of North Hempstead, at Roslyn. A third copy of the laws is in the New York State Library. The library copy is certified by " M. Wren," who was secretary of the Duke of York, as "Concordat cum originale."*

The New York Historical Society, in 1800, published a copy of the East Hampton copy of the Duke's Laws, which is certified by the clerk of the town as a correct copy of the original. (Vol. 1, p. 307, of collections of the New York Historical Society for the year 1809.)

The several existing copies of the "Duke's Laws" vary, partly from errors in transcribing them, and partly from amendments, which were made from time to time by the Court of Assizes, and either were not transmitted to all of the towns, or, if received, were not recorded in the book containing the "Duke's Laws." As each of these copies had the force of law in the jurisdiction in which it was filed, either may be regarded as an original. The commissioners have caused carefully prepared copies to be made of the East Hampton and Roslyn copies of the "Duke's Laws." The East Hampton copy is made the basis of this publication, while the variations in the Roslyn copy, as they occur, are noted in brackets. Variations between the two copies in spelling and capitalization are not noted. It will be noticed that the East Hampton copy states that the laws were published March 1, 1664. In the Roslyn copy the date is given as March 1, 1664-5, which was March 1, 1665, the first three months of the year, before the change in the calendar, being treated as months of the preceding year, as well as of the year under the new calendar.
