Mealtime

November 5, 1985

The TV's on, filling the small room with commercial melodies. My child is sitting on the floor, her hands busy making noises with building blocks. I bring the congee from the kitchen and sit myself down, blowing cool a small bite to feed her. While staring at the dancing ducks on TV, she opens her mouth to accept the food and happily claps her hands. I lower my head to concentrate on scooping the second mouthful. By the time I look back up, she's by the sofa. I shuffle over and put the second scoop into her mouth. A moment later, and she's drumming at the table with the building block in her hand. Just like that, I chase her around, one bite at a time, until finally the bowl is empty. It brings me such satisfaction.

My child, I hope you grow to be as tall and strong as a tree.

*With the slow passage of time, our appearances have changed,
and so has the appearance of our house.*

My child is about to become a mother.

November 14, 2018

Mealtime

My daughter sits on a mat playing with a toy car. I'm in the kitchen preparing her lunch. Today, there are finger foods—chicken drumsticks and bite-sized onigiri—but I've also prepared the udon noodles that I like.

At lunch, she sits in the highchair, holding her small spoon. I sit across from her, and we enjoy a meal together. I really like watching her delighted face as she eats. Although it's only the beginning, I will do my best to ignore the mess left behind on the table and the floor, telling myself that it's a process and I shouldn't disturb her exploration. I focus on the flowers in a vase on the table, space out, and then clean up the mess after lunch.

My child, eating is a wonderful thing. Enjoying a meal with your family is a precious experience. I'm looking forward to when you've grown a bit, and we can chat during our meal.
